Class Schedule: Monday 16:15-19:15

Description of the course

The aim of the course is to introduce the students into the migration and nationalism phenomenon – the creation of stereotypes and the functioning of the game “Us” and “Them” in everyday social relations and in society via media, commercial culture, policy-making and historical understanding.

The laboratory of Czech lands will serve the students as the “field site” for this task as the Czech Republic is situated in the center of Europe, thus located at the intersection of Eastern and Western cultures. We will explore these concepts throughout the course.

The Czech lands will be for us not only an arena for us to discuss history and its tragic turns, but also as an attempt to identify the contemporary situation in the Czech lands. The Czech Republic was one of the most heterogeneous places in Europe, but because of historical circumstances became homogeneous when it emerged as an independent state after the fall of Communism. Migration, EU membership and globalization are rapidly diversifying the Czech Republic. We will discuss these historical changes and the contemporary situation to come to a better understanding of where the Czech Republic is today and the mentality that has emerged.

Participation of students is expected and required.

Objectives

The course is aimed at describing various issues connected to processes that form contemporary European society (Czech society). Students will be introduced into the complex phenomenon of migration, nationalism, formation of ethnic minorities etc. through different perspectives. This course will not be compromised only of theoretical lectures, but practical illustrations and examples will serve to familiarize the students with the issues mentioned above.

After completing the course students will be able:

- to apply theoretical concepts from studies of migration, visual sociology and political science
- to understand the importance of stereotypes in the past and the present, to understand what new methods are used to create stereotypes, to understand the new divisions between us and the other
- to learn historical background, facts about ethnical, language diversity of Czech lands

CET Syllabus of Term

- to understand the position of the Czech Republic in today's Europe

Course Method & Requirements

Lectures and seminars (discussions)

In order for the course to be successful, students have to fulfil following requirements:

Attendance and participation in class

Students are required to participate actively in the classes – involvement in discussions etc. For the attendance policy see Academic handbook.

Weekly responses to readings

Students are asked to submit a position paper (300 words at least) based on the reading for the week. This position paper should reflect issues and important questions from the texts and also students' understanding of connection with the overall goals of the course. Position papers should be submitted in hard copy in class. (Except Week 1 – Introduction, Week 7 – Midterm, Week 13 – Presentation of student's final papers). In addition, each student will be once a semester asked to present her/his position paper (15 min.). The discussion with the rest of students will follow.

Midterm

Midterm test will be based on the topics discussed in the first half of the semester.

Final Test

Final test will consist of questions related to the discussed topics and obligatory reading.

Paper

Final paper is the most important part of the students' work during the whole semester. The topic will be chosen from the list of themes from the syllabus. While writing the final paper, students should benefit from obligatory and suggested readings, lecturers and their own experience. The minimal length of the text is 2 500 words. The paper has to follow the academic standards concerning the form.

Students are asked to deliver an outline (200 words) for the final paper by Week 7. The outline should contain description of the topic, aims of the final paper, methodology and basic literature and resources which the students will have worked with. At the beginning of the semester students will receive a "Grading Grid" for the final paper - clearly defining how each component of the assignment will be graded. The outline should be sent to: 2salim.m@gmail.com and also submitted in hard copy in class.

Methods of Evaluation

The final grade is determined as follows:

Attendance/Participation	10%
Weekly Reading responses	10%
Midterm	20%
Final test	20%
Final paper	40%

CET Syllabus of Term

Attendance Policy

Mandatory attendance is a primary requirement for a responsible learning experience. Please consider that every absence has the potential to lower the final grade, as it may affect the “attendance and participation” portion of your grade or result in missing key information that could appear on quizzes or exams. In addition, professors take attendance at the beginning of the class. If you are more than 10 minutes late, professors mark one hour of absence from class. Onsite visits count as regular class hours. A no-show to a site visit counts as an absence. Detailed information about the Attendance you will find in the CET
